

Modeled Projections: Michigan

powered by

CITIZEN DATA

Relative to recent electoral history,

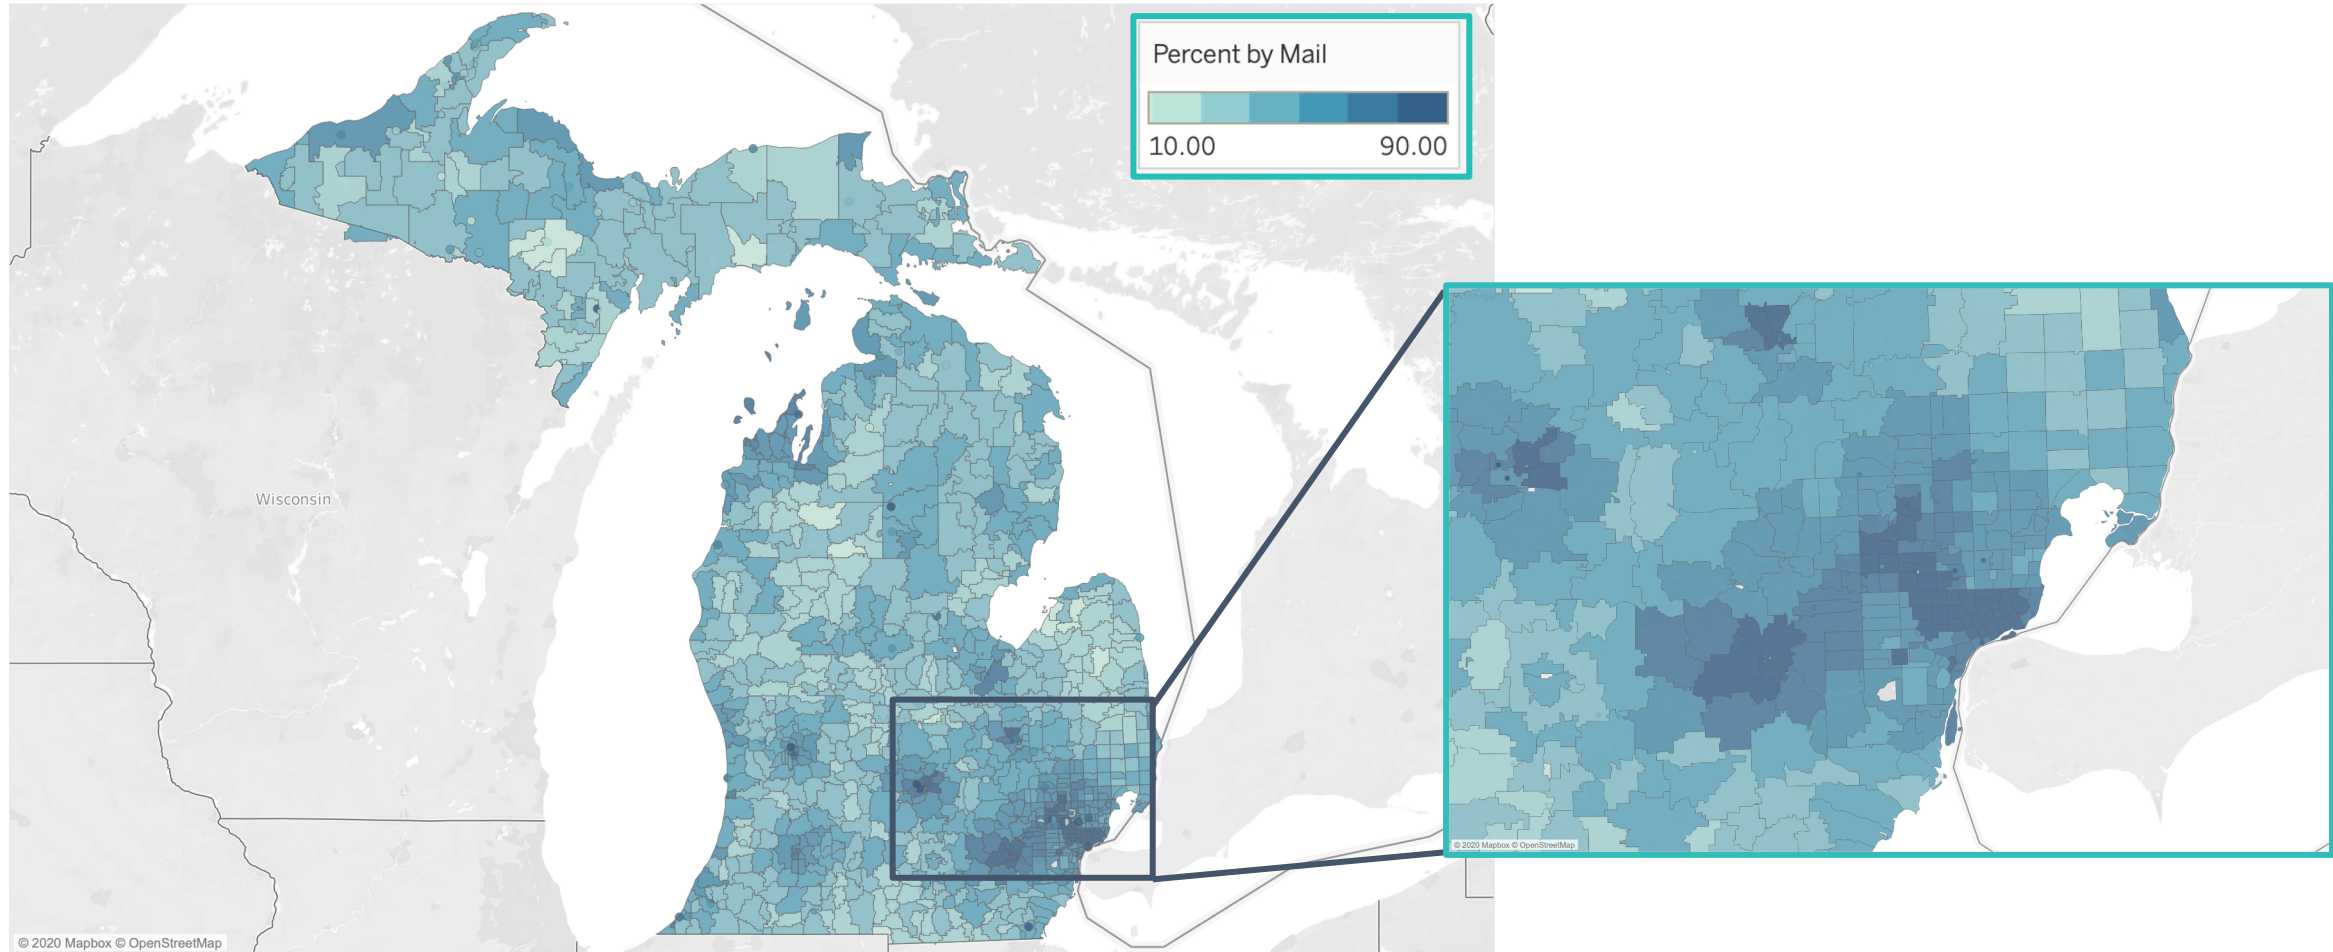

2020 Michigan turnout and absentee rates are much higher.

Overall, nearly 5 million voters are expected to turn out in the Michigan 2020 general election. About 62% of those votes are projected to be cast by an absentee ballot. So far, 2.5 million Michigan voters have requested ballots.

Michigan mail-in voting are high in cities, with lower rates up north and in the Upper Peninsula.

Cities in Michigan will see higher rates of mail-in voting than rural areas. Detroit and the surrounding suburbs will see the highest rates of mail-in voting, followed by the Lansing, Flint, and Kalamazoo areas. The zoomed-in area around Detroit and Ann Arbor display the densest areas will see the highest rates of voting by mail, though the suburbs will see elevated rates as well.

Michigan Democrats are more than twice as likely as Republicans to vote by mail, with Republicans nearly twice as likely to vote in-person.

Democrats will drive the majority of mail votes, with Republicans comprising only a quarter of all votes by mail. However, Republicans comprise more than 50% of in-person votes, and are nearly twice as likely to vote in-person as Democrats.

CITIZEN DATA